

Allies of President Trump are upset over a post by former President Obama about the motives of the suspected shooter at the White House Correspondents' Association dinner.

On Sunday, Obama posted on the social media platform X that “although we don't yet have the details about the motives behind last night's shooting at the White House Correspondents Dinner, it's incumbent upon all us to reject the idea that violence has any place in our democracy.”

“It's also a sobering reminder of the courage and sacrifice that U.S. Secret Service Agents show every day. I'm grateful to them – and thankful that the agent who was shot is going to be okay,” the former president added.

In response to Obama's post, conservative influencer Benny Johnson responded by listing off alleged pieces of evidence around the suspect targeting Trump and contrasting that with the former president saying there weren't yet details about the motives behind the shooting. In response to Obama's post, conservative influencer Benny Johnson responded by listing off alleged pieces of evidence around the suspect targeting Trump and contrasting that with the former president saying there weren't yet details about the motives behind the shooting.

More...